No matter the battle, the Hatteras 55 Convertible is ready to win the war, and will do so in unlimited luxury.

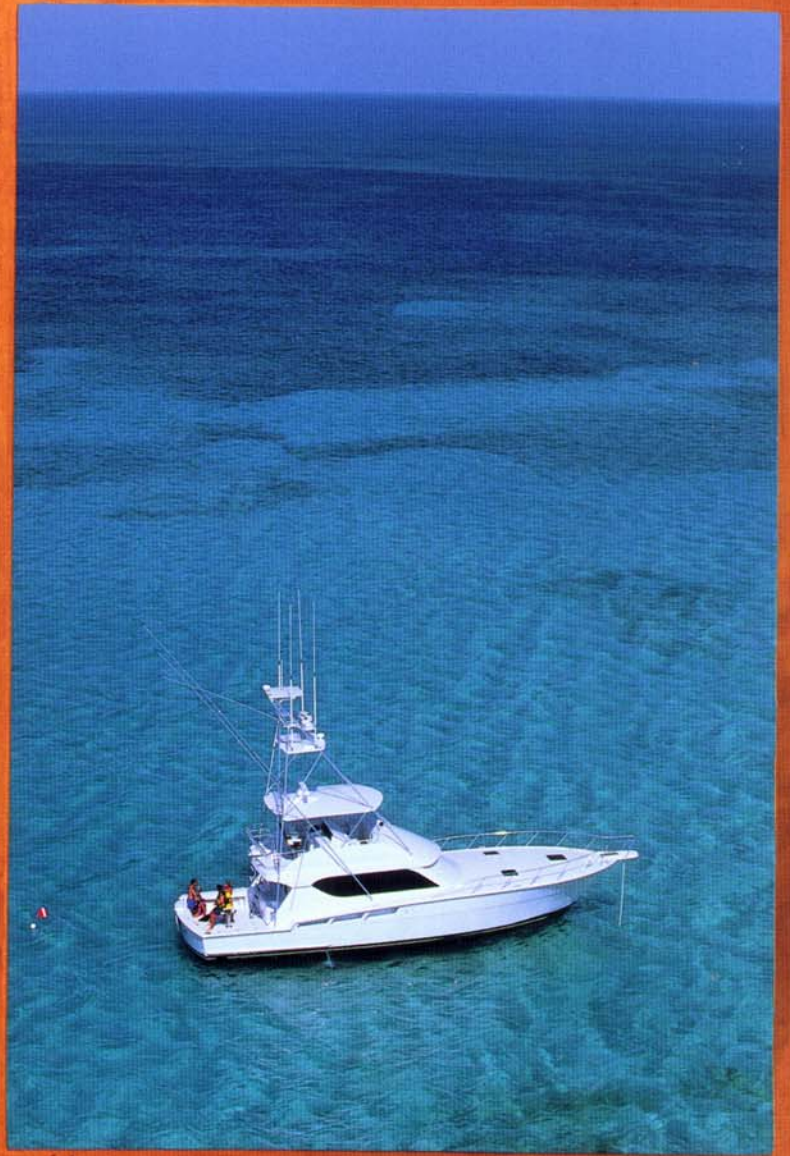

Our last evening in our Yucatan paradise. Julie and I anchored our Hatteras 55 a quarter mile offshore in the azure waters, reflecting on the past two weeks of absolute beauty, grandeur and excitement. We explored the thirty miles of Chinchorro Reef, diving amongst the spectacular colors of fish and coral. Saw countless shipwrecks where ancient cannons lay sleeping in their eternal beds of sand. Lived the rush of trolling floating beds of sea grass battling barracuda slashing our bait. In all we released 9 sailfish, 3 Striped Marlin, and 5 Atlantic Blues, including the 400 pounder Julie caught and will never forget. As we watched the golden sun so lazily set behind the ruins of El Castillo, I rubbed the stiffness from Julie's shoulders and told her that if she listened carefully, she might hear the whispering song of Mayan women calling their warriors ashore.

Julie took this picture while I intently tried taking one of my own. We hoped to capture what it felt like exploring Chinchorro. In our task, we only succeeded in capturing the beauty. The feeling remains indescribable.

When I found this spot, I had to get a picture of our 55' Hatteras. So with camera in hand and a very long climb to the cliff top, I got one of the most spectacular shots I've ever taken.
